- auto mode (air quality sensor --manual does not mention anywhere how it works) - fast mode (10min high flux, then back to auto mode) cons: - like any other brand, sucks air from the front and throw it from behind. - not silent in medium mode. very noisy on high flux mode. - charcoal filter is a joke. only cover 50% of the area due to bad design.

It seems to me that cleaning dust and pollen from the air is the grunt work of an air purifier, and odor control is more of a premium nicety. Sharp apparently sees things the opposite way as the FP-N40CX includes an odor sensor, but not a dust/pollen sensor. What this means is that the auto mode is fairly useless.
