The Imjin And Kapyong Battles

The Battle of Kapyong (Korean: 임진강, 22-25 April 1951), also known as the Battle of Jiaping (Chinese: 加平戰役; pinyin: Jiā Píng Zhàn Dòu), was fought during the Korean War between United Nations Command (UN) forces—primarily Canadian, Australian, and New Zealand—and the Chinese People's Volunteer Army (PVA). The fighting occurred during the Chinese Spring Offensive and ...

When the units of the 29th Infantry Brigade were ultimately forced to fall back, their actions in the Battle of the Imjin River together with those of other UN forces, for example in the Battle of Kapyong, had blunted the impetus of the PVA offensive and allowed UN forces to retreat to prepared defensive positions north of Seoul, where the PVA were halted.

Battle of the Imjin River - Wikipedia

As it happened, the Chinese Spring Offensive largely collapsed by the end of April. The defeat at Kapyong, and an even more costly draw at the Battle of Imjin River (April 22–25, 1951), had sapped the strength of the Chinese advance, and by late May UN troops once again pushed the front line north of the 38th parallel.
